

Hawkins Contamination Project Management

Hawkins is well known for its highly specialised and independent post-incident Contamination Assessment following fires, floods and chemical spills in which our scientists advise insurers and their appointed restoration companies on the extent and method of decontamination. Our involvement ensures that the extent of cleaning is not excessive, but that what needs to be done is done thoroughly so that problems such as long term corrosion and unreliability of machinery are avoided.

Hawkins also now offers a Project Management Service in which we will manage the decontamination process as well as the assessment. Our scientists will evaluate the extent of contamination, set out a suitable schedule of work, a methodology and, if requested, instruct the restoration company and other specialist companies that may be required. We will then monitor and manage the progress of the clean-up operation through to its completion.

This service provides you with a scientific solution in which a major factor in a loss can be taken care of with a single telephone call to the Hawkins Contamination Assessment Team.
